Freeze-drying is a process where the natural products are frozen and then placed into a vacuum. The ice crystals formed in the product are then sublimated into water vapor, while the cell structure of the original products remains intact. Freeze dried products retain their original nutritional value, texture, shape and taste. The end product is as fresh as the original food, with just the water removed! When re-hydrated with water, it rehydrates to resemble the original natural product. The basic idea of freeze-drying is to completely remove water from some material, such as food, while leaving the basic structure and composition of the material whole and unmarred.

Step 1

Fresh or cooked foods are flash frozen

Step 2

The frozen products are placed in a vacuum chamber and water content is gently drawn out of the cells, as steam, via sublimation

Step 3

The freeze dried food is sealed in moisture and oxygen proof packaging to ensure freshness until opened.

Step 4

When the water is replaced, the food regains its original fresh flavor, aroma, texture and appearance.
